Course Description:

This class traces the development of the visual arts in so-called “Western” societies from the fourteenth to the twenty-first century. Our primary focus will be examining the relationships between tangible art-objects and the principal concerns of the people that produced the paintings, sculptures, and architectural structures in question. We will come to see that these relationships are unstable; and, indeed, that the notion of “art” itself had different meanings for different historical people. Over the course of the semester, we will not simply seek to place art in its original historical context. Instead, we will approach the visual arts themselves as an important context in which the history of politics, religion, and philosophy unfolds.

Due Date: Essay 2 – electronic submission by 11:59pm (New York Time)

Weekly Impressions:

These assignments call for you to reflect on the set of lectures you viewed during Weeks 1 and 3. Due dates are listed in the Course Schedule above.

Your task is to select one work of art that stood out to you from each lecture. You will then develop a written statement that

1) briefly explains why the work you selected caught your attention

- and -

2) relates the work to one of the following themes: social status, political power, religious belief. In this respect, special attention should be paid to the visual character of the work itself. Consider the compositional arrangement, the use of color, the medium, the intended context of display, et cetera.

This type of writing exercise does not call for outside research - do not consult any websites, articles, or books without my expressed approval. These assignments are opportunities to demonstrate what you’ve learned from our class lectures. You should consult your class notes. You are welcome to exchange ideas with your classmates. You are also welcome to discuss your ideas with me prior to the due date. My only stipulation is that the document you submit needs to be your own work.

These assignments should be treated as formal pieces of writing. So write clearly. And be sure to proofread your work before submitting it.

Essays:

We will be writing two thematic essays in this class. Thematic essays require you choose at least five images and discuss the ways in which they engage with one of the issues we explore in our lectures. Due dates are listed in the Course Schedule above.

This type of writing exercise does not call for outside research - do not consult any websites, articles, or books without my expressed approval. These essays are opportunities to demonstrate what you've learned from our class lectures. You should consult your class notes. You are welcome to exchange ideas with your classmates. You are also welcome to discuss your essay with me prior to the due date. My only stipulation, here, is that the document you submit needs to be your own work.

The specifics of each individual essay assignment can be found below. But there are few general requirements worth mentioning at this point.

These essays are formal pieces of writing. So write clearly. Include a title, an introduction, and a conclusion. Be sure to proofread your essay before you turn it in.

There are no length or formatting requirements for these essays. Quality is what counts. But a word to the wise: your discussion should aim for depth of analysis—you goal is to link precise visual observations to the principal concerns the people who produced the art-object in question, all while focusing on the theme of the essay itself. This is difficult to achieve without sufficient length.

Essay 1 Prompt:

Naturalism was a principal concern among artists in the Renaissance and Baroque eras. Painters and sculptors alike studied human anatomy. They paid attention to the properties of light. They developed new techniques for describing the natural world – linear perspective, atmospheric perspective, oil paint, etc. And they created works of art with a heightened sense of immediacy. In these regards, naturalism in the visual arts is often related to important religious concerns.

In essay form, analyze no less than five examples of Early Modern (Renaissance and Baroque) religious art that speak to the period's interest in naturalism. Carefully analyze each work you select, paying specific attention to the areas where naturalistic painting practices intersect with the period's religious concerns. You are welcome to select any of the works we studied in the first half of this class, but you should aim for some sense of breadth (i.e. don't simply choose three works by the same artist).

Note: The title of a work of art is always italicized when written in print.

Essay 2 Prompt:

In the second half of this class, we've seen several artists engage with what might be called significant social problems. These problems have ranged from practices of covert prostitution and slavery; to the "crisis of modernity"; to issues involving gender, violence, and war. In essay form, discuss no less than five images that engage with these types of social problems.

You are welcome to pick from any of the images we're covered in the second half of the course. But your essay should also reflect the scope of the material we've addressed (i.e. don't simply pick three images from the nineteenth century).

Carefully analyze each image you select, citing specific instances where the artist's choices intersect with the broader social concerns that you are describing. In this, particular attention should be paid to the way your artists respond to these concerns. Do they adopt the position of an activist and envision their work as a means of changing certain behaviors? Are they trying to cure society's ills? Do they serve as a type of investigator, exposing practices that many would rather ignore?

This assignment calls for a polished presentation. Write clearly. Include an introduction and a conclusion. Be sure to proofread your essay before you turn it in.

Note: The title of a work of art is always italicized when written in print.
